

National Security and Foreign Affairs

As the Chairman of an Armed Services Subcommittee, I am committed to investing in the capabilities that will protect our country and provide our men and women in uniform with the best training and equipment to meet today's evolving threats and missions. I have worked hard to make sure that our nation addresses the dangers posed by weapons of mass destruction, gives our military sufficient time to rest and train between deployments, and provides the benefits and respect our troops were promised. As a longtime member of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly, I believe that working with our allies is a vital way to advance America's global interests. America has always been strongest when our foreign policy makes use of all of our great nation's strengths -- diplomatic, economic, cultural and military -- and works with our allies to solve global problems before they turn into crises.
